

Introduction

This report gives detailed findings from the National Survey of Charities and Social Enterprises (NSCSE), conducted by Ipsos MORI on behalf of the Office for Civil Society. It provides you with the overall results for each question in the survey for Bournemouth for two waves of the survey - 2008 and 2010.

The National Survey of Charities and Social Enterprises was conducted amongst charities, social enterprises and voluntary organisations across all upper tier local authorities (151) in England from September to December 2010. Wave one of the survey was conducted from September to December 2008 among all 149 local authorities.

Full details of the methodology and other technical details for the research are included at the end of this report.

Headline Findings

This section presents headline findings for six key questions taken from the survey. The combined proportion of charities, voluntary groups and social enterprises in your area who responded positively to each question in 2008 and 2010 is shown.

Interpreting the data

Because a sample of all charities, voluntary groups and social enterprises in your area has responded to the survey, the percentages are subject to sampling tolerances. For change to be meaningful, it needs to be statistically significant.

In cases where there has been a statistically significant change since 2008, the 2010 percentage is shaded:

 dark purple indicates that the 2010 percentage is higher than 2008
 light purple indicates that the 2010 percentage is lower than 2008

Please note that it is difficult to draw conclusions of significance at 1% or less (i.e. where there are fewer than five responses) and therefore significant differences at this level should be treated with caution.

Q23: The proportion of organisations in your area who consider that statutory bodies in your local area have a positive influence on their success has stayed the same.

Q24: The proportion of organisations in your area who currently have at least a fair amount of direct dealings with local statutory bodies has stayed the same.

Q22: The proportion of organisations in your area who are satisfied with their ability to influence local decisions that are relevant to them has stayed the same.

Q18: The proportion of organisations in your area who are satisfied with the support available to them in their local area has stayed the same.

Q21.1: The proportion of organisations in your area who consider that local statutory bodies in your local area value the work of their organisation has stayed the same.

Q16: The proportion of organisations in your area who are satisfied with local statutory grant funding / contract bidding arrangements has stayed the same.

How to use this report

What these data represent

This report gives you the detailed findings and trend data from each question of the NSCSE in your area – that is, how charities, voluntary groups and social enterprises in your area responded to the survey in both 2008 and 2010. Answers are provided at an aggregate level to protect the confidentiality of respondents.

About the data

Unless otherwise stated, the number of respondents answering each question is:

	2008	2010

Data from the survey have been weighted within each local authority to ensure results are representative of the make up of charities, social enterprises and voluntary organisations in that authority (according to organisational type).

N/A indicates that data is not available or applicable. Where percentages do not add up to 100% this can be due to a variety of factors – such as multiple responses or computer rounding the decimal points up or down.

The 'Other specify' responses have been back-coded in 2010. This means for some questions, where applicable, responses that were provided in the 'Other' text box were coded into existing response options. As a result, care should be taken in comparing data between waves for these questions. For instance, an increase may be the result of coding. The questions affected are Q1 - Q6, Q13, Q25, Q26, Q34 and Q35.

Gaining insight from the data

These data should give you a good picture of what charities, voluntary groups and social enterprises in your area are thinking. Some answers may be more revealing than others. Used alongside dialogue within the local sector and infrastructure bodies, and knowledge of local context, this information can be used to understand the local sector, and strengthen relationships with such organisations.

For this research a sample, rather than the entire population, was surveyed and therefore the percentages in this survey are subject to sampling tolerances – which vary with the size of the population, the size of the sample and the percentage figure concerned. For important information on the indicative sampling tolerances for this research please see the detail at the end of this report.

Please be careful when looking at how the results in your area have changed. For change to be meaningful, it must be statistically significant (that is, the difference represents an actual change rather than being due to chance). Significant changes between 2008 and 2010 are shaded in purple throughout the report.

Delving further into the data

Having seen what the headline answers are in your area, you may want to explore specific issues in greater detail. In doing so, we recommend that you start with the issues highlighted on the front page of this report, as these are the issues that are most influential in the relationship between the sector and local statutory bodies. You may also identify other questions of your choosing to consider.

Once you have identified issues key to your local area, you can explore these in more detail at www.nscsesurvey.com.

The online analysis tool enables you to analyse the data in two ways:

1) Compare scores in your local area to other local areas, and to the national average: Go to <http://www.nscsesurvey.com/analysis/> and select the question you wish to compare, and the local authority areas you wish to compare your area against. This should help you put your scores into a wider context, and help see how they are affecting overall views in the area.

2) Compare one answer with another at the national level: In many cases, we can gain an insight into what underlies the results of one question by cross-referring to the answers of other questions. For example, we might wish to know whether organisations that report sufficient levels of staff expressed higher levels of satisfaction with particular aspects of their local area – with local support, or with local guidance, or funding and access to finance. You can carry out this analysis by selecting the 'cross-tabs' option, and selecting the two survey questions to compare. This analysis is only possible at the national level due to small cell counts at the local level.

Introduction

This report gives headline findings from the National Survey of Charities and Social Enterprises conducted by Ipsos MORI on behalf of the Office for Civil Society. It provides you with the overall results for each question in the survey for Bournemouth in 2008 and 2010.

	2008	2010
Unless otherwise stated, the number of respondents answering each question is:	198	171

Methodology

The National Survey of Charities and Social Enterprises was conducted amongst charities, social enterprises and voluntary organisations across all upper tier local authorities in England from September to December 2010. The 2008 wave of the survey was carried out from September to December 2008.

In total 112,796 charities, social enterprises and voluntary organisations across all 151 single and two-tier authorities in England were invited to participate in the survey. Paper questionnaires were mailed to all selected organisations (along with a link and a password enabling them to access the survey online). Two reminder questionnaires were sent out to organisations (and telephone reminders were conducted with a sample of non-responding organisations). Organisations were able to complete the survey either online or on paper throughout the fieldwork period.

Sampling

A database of charities, social enterprises and voluntary organisations drawing on the list of registered charities and registers of Community Interest Companies, Companies Limited by Guarantee and Industrial and Provident Societies in England, was supplied by Guidestar UK.

Calculations were conducted to obtain the ideal number of organisations required to be asked to complete the survey to achieve robustness. In some areas a census survey was conducted (i.e. all charities, social enterprises and voluntary organisations were asked to take part), and in others a sample of organisations were selected from within specific stratifiers. Organisation type (registered charity, CIC, CLG or IPS) was the main stratifier. Registered charities were further stratified according to income.

Fieldwork Dates

First full mailout of questionnaires	17th September 2010
First reminder mailout of questionnaires	18th October 2010
Second reminder mailout of questionnaires	15th November 2010
Telephone reminders (conducted with small proportion of selected organisations)	22nd November - 14th December 2010

Technical Details

	2008	2010
The total population of charities, voluntary groups and social enterprises for your area:	422	403
The total number of respondents in your area:	198	171
The response rate for your area:	47%	42%

This is the proportion of organisations who responded to the survey, out of the total number invited to take part.

Sampling tolerances

For this research a sample, rather than the entire population, was surveyed and therefore the percentages in this survey are subject to sampling tolerances – which vary with the size of the sample and the percentage figure concerned.

A common way to express statistical reliability is to express sample tolerance in terms of confidence intervals. This means that the overall sample for each wave is accurate to within certain margins of error and that any differences between waves need to be of a certain size for them to be statistically significant.

However, it is important to note that in principle, sample tolerances can only be calculated when data have been collected through a pure random probability sample. For this research it was necessary to use a self-selecting postal survey and therefore it is not possible to be definitive about any sample tolerances, and any quoted in this report may well be larger and must only be treated as broadly indicative. Moreover, it is also important to note that sampling tolerances are affected by weighting. The effect of the weighting has been taken into account in the indicative calculations detailed below.

Indication of approximate sampling tolerance (+/-) applicable to percentages at or near 50% (at the 95% confidence level)	7.5%	8.1%
Indication of approximate sampling tolerance (+/-) applicable to percentages at or near 25%/75% (at the 95% confidence level)	6.5%	7.0%

Tolerances are also involved in the comparison of results between waves. A difference between the 2008 and 2010 percentages must be of at least a certain size to be considered statistically significant. If the difference between 2008 and 2010 percentages is greater than the values below, then it is significant at the 5% level.

Indication of the least significant difference (+/-) applicable to a 2008 or 2010 percentage at or near 50% (at the 95% confidence level)	11.0%
Indication of the least significant difference (+/-) applicable to a 2008 or 2010 percentage at or near 25%/75% (at the 95% confidence level).	9.5%
